Outline of the Biomedical Sciences Course (Master's Program)

1 Purpose of setting up the course and specific educational aims

Recent advances in life sciences and information sciences have opened up abundant prospects for applying the achievements of basic research within bio-related industries and new medical services, including drug discovery and regenerative medicine. At the same time, there is a need to solve many challenges, such as medical ethics and information security that are associated with advanced medical technology, and community healthcare support in our aging society, which are opening up a wide range of potential roles for medical researchers and health professionals. Many doors are being opened to non-medical school graduates and trained researchers, educators, and/or highly skilled workers who can exercise leadership in the life sciences and medical fields. However, there is a looming shortage of researchers/educators able to respond to the needs of society and who can take an active role in Biomedical Sciences, this new interdisciplinary field between life sciences and medicine.

There is also a growing number of non-medicine, non-veterinary, and non-dentistry graduates who are hoping to pursue their interest in life science research or medical fields; however, before these graduates can enter a graduate school of medicine to take a PhD course, they either need to have obtained a Master's Degree or must have more than two years' research experience at a university or research institute. Gunma University Graduate School of Medicine has been shifting its focus of interest to new interdisciplinary fields. For example, in 2003, we re-organized our Medical Sciences Course (Doctoral Program) and our research and educational system into a basic plus clinical integrated style, and established a PhD program in health sciences, now being run by the Graduate School of Health Sciences. The implementation of a day/evening course system for both programs allowed us to offer the course to mature students not from only the medical and health science fields, but also from related fields. However, we were still unable to accept graduates from facilities other than medicine, veterinary, or dentistry directly to our medical sciences course.

In response to increasing demand, and to broaden our intake of graduates from other faculties, we have established a Biomedical Science Course (Master's program) within the Graduate School of Medicine. This program aims to educate non-medical school graduates in the fundamental knowledge and skills needed to engage in the type of independent research that increasingly underpins medical and life sciences, and to foster leadership in medical-related fields on the part of health professional experts.

2 Academic discipline and research targets

Biomedical Sciences is a general term for the life sciences field, which overlaps medicine, life sciences, and other medical interdisciplinary fields. The Biomedical Sciences Course is designed to draw together life sciences and traditional basic medicine/clinical medicine (anatomy, physiology, biochemistry, cell biology, molecular biology, genetics, pharmacology, neuroscience, microbiology, parasitology, pathology, forensic medicine, hygiene, public health, medical ethics, medical informatics, internal medicine, surgical medicine, obstetrics and gynecology, otorhinology, rehabilitation medicine, clinical laboratory medicine, nuclear medicine, oncology, radiology, clinical pharmacology, pediatrics, psychiatry, etc.) as educational and research subjects to promote the elucidation of biological processes from a medical perspective and to establish Biomedical Sciences as a discipline that is aimed at the creation of new medical care: not only diagnosis and treatment, but also the promotion of health and improvement of quality of life.

We extended our research targets to medical physics, a field of growing importance, in academic year 2009, and will continue to promote broader biomedical science research.

3 Curriculum

- 1) Class subjects are divided into three subdivisions: basic subjects, practical subjects, and subjects suitable for research.
- 2) Of the basic subjects needed to be taken in the first year, fundamental knowledge of life sciences/medicine and basic techniques of the type required for biomedical science research will be acquired in the required subjects. This will place all students on the same footing. Basic factors within Biomedical Sciences that are needed in multiple major field will be acquired in the elective subjects. Students who do not decide on a major field on beginning the course will be able to gain an understanding of current problems in medical-related fields, and make their decision based on their specialties, abilities and wishes by the end of the first semester of the 1st year while taking these basic subjects.

- 3) Of the practical subjects offered, elective subjects can be selected that are appropriate to the student's research project or career options after earning their Master's Degree. These subjects will advance the understanding of the applicable and practical knowledge required to pursue Biomedical Science research in research area and/or to further improve expertise.
- 4) Research subjects designed to promote the acquisition of knowledge needed to propose and implement a research project, and techniques for presentation of research results.

4 Others

Educational courses in Biomedical Sciences promote specialization in the following subjects.

Medical Physics Course

In this course, established in 2009, we train medical physics professionals who will be able to expand the development of highly-advanced medical technologies such as heavy particle radiotherapy using high-energy carbon ion beams and intensity-modulated radiation therapy using X-rays.

International Training Program for Experts in Medical Physics

This course is designed for prospective leaders in medical physics. The International Training Program for Cooperative Experts in Clinical Oncology, applied by the University of Tsukuba, was selected as a Promotion Plan for the Platform of Human Resource Development for Cancer, launched by the Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology (MEXT) in 2012. In this course, we use unique teaching methods that employ e-learning strategies.

Radiation Biomedical Science Course

It provides basic knowledge of radiation science by studying linkage subjects in cooperation with Gunma Prefectural College of Health Sciences.

Medicine and Engineering Collaborative Course

This course is open since April 2019 for students who have previously studied natural sciences, engineering, and related fields. The mission of this course is to foster persons who will be able to lead and initiate work combining aspects of medicine and engineering in various sectors of academia, industries, medical institutions, and governmental institutions. Students can engage a wide area of expertise and conduct biomedical research under collaboration with the Graduate Schools of Science and Engineering.

Program for Cultivating Global Leaders in Heavy Ion Therapeutics and Engineering for Doctoral Courses

This Program selected as "Leading Program in Doctoral Education" by MEXT (It was launched in 2011). After enrollment of PhD program at Graduate School of Medicine, graduates of Biomedical Sciences Course may register this program. If application is approved, it is possible to complete the Doctoral Course in three years.
